Are you an EAP leader or practitioner?

Are you a workplace with an EAP?

It is estimated there are around 300 employee assistance program providers (EAPs) in Australia.

EAP practitioners may be mental health specialists, counsellors, psychologists, social workers. EAP practitioners may be working as clinicians, trainers, facilitators, or in organisational development roles.

EAPs are often staffed by a combination of employee practitioners and associate or affiliate private practitioners (subcontractors) for whom the EAP is only part of their practice.

Every EAP worker's understanding of domestic and family violence matters.

The readiness and quality of Employee Assistance Program responses to domestic and family violence matter. Every EAP. Any workplace.

EAP Responses Presentation (New)

This presentation is designed to complement good work already available or in place. It is designed to support EAPs with something to consider and take on from today, without delays and without cost barriers.

The EAP responses to domestic and family violence presentation is in a video format (28mins) and is in two parts:

Part One (10mins) is designed to build on understanding of domestic and family violence.

Part Two (18mins) is about supporting access to insights and resources that can inform your responses as individuals, teams and as an organisation.

Who can you share the EAP presentation with to support their work?
