

FUTURE LEADERS

We see in the Insight Exchange animation ‘Seeing Possibilities’ (6mins) that every sector is a possible door to information and support for victim-survivors of domestic, sexualised and family violence. But what if sectors, industries and leaders are underinformed, and not being prepared early through their studies and professional experiences and networks?

Today's tertiary students will become tomorrow's leaders.

If we really want to transform how we understand and evolve the ‘system’ of responses we have to change and support who is part of it, and how early on tomorrow's leaders are invited and supported to be involved.

The Future Leaders program has been donated by Insight Exchange and has no cost barriers.

Are you a tertiary student in Australia at a college, academy or university?

The Future Leaders program is about creating a supported space for shared learning between some of today's leaders and emerging future leaders about what is possible in addressing domestic, family and sexualised violence.

Together in the sessions we want to exchange insights and talk across the traditional divides between industries, institutions and generations.

6 virtual 3hr sessions over 12 months. Places are free. Spaces are limited. A short expression of interest required.

Intended outcomes:

Understand the importance of ecosystem responses and explore ideas around where your field of studies fits into addressing violence and abuse.

Understand more about DFSV including lived-experience insights and lived-expertise, and the importance of meaning, dignity, social responses, deliberation, resistance and responses to violence and abuse, and why language matters.

Build clarity in how to provide helpful and supportive responses to victim-survivors and identify/challenge complicit, harmful and unhelpful responses.

Meet and exchange insights with leaders and subject matter experts who are forging change in today's systems.

Develop connections with peer tertiary students across locations, fields and intuitions.
